The Cigar That Fell in Love with a Pipe
Featuring Orson Welles & Rita Hayworth

By David Camus and Nick Abadzis

On the eve of the release of his latest movie, The Lady From Shanghai, Orson Welles receives a box of cigars from an admirer. The cigars are the finest Welles has ever smoked, and they lift him into an orgiastic reverie about the life of the famous Cuban cigar roller who made them, Conchita Marquez. As Orson dreams about his exquisite gift (one not appreciated by his wife Rita Hayworth), Conchita's story of triumph, despair, and love unfolds.

Already one of the most famous cigar rollers in the world by the age of sixteen, Conchita Marquez's sole passion in life is rolling cigars and the fragrant Cuban tobacco she grew up smelling. But when a medical condition threatens to take her life's passion from her, Conchita embarks on a harrowing journey across the world that ultimately leaves her in need of help from Orson Welles himself. An enthralling and visually stunning story, The Cigar That Fell in Love with a Pipe (April 15; SelfMadeHero; U.S: $22.95; 9781906838485) is a book that will charm graphic novel enthusiasts and fans of classic Hollywood alike.
